My grandmother's schooldays

My grandmother went to a private school. It was a religious school. It was single-sex and she liked this type of school because there weren't any boys so she didn't get distracted and paid more attention in class. It was also a boarding school, so she had to stay at school every day. She only went back home during the holidays.

The name of the school was "The sacred Heart" The building was very big with four floors and two huge playgrounds. She wore a uniform which consisted in a blue skirt, a white shirt, a blue sweater, blue socks and black shoes. Classes were large: there were thirty students in each class.

The teachers were very strict. The desks were in rows, so students couldn't talk to their friends so much. She remembers one teacher in particular. Her name was Mary. She was her first form teacher. She was very nice and friendly and she was good at explaining things.

My grandma enjoyed acting and at school they had a big theatre where students could act.
